OSHA's forklift training requirement 29CFR1910.178 (1)(2)(iii) states "all operator training and evaluation shall be conducted by persons who have the knowledge, training, and experience to train powered industrial truck operators and evaluate their competence".

In this comprehensive one-day course, participants will learn what the new OSHA requirements are, how they effect their company, and how to comply with the new standards. This course is designed to give the tools and knowledge needed to return to work and establish an "in-house" operator training program for forklift operators, that is specific to their company's operation and equipment types, while meeting the OSHA requirements.

The class includes instructors training and reference binder & choice of training kits (sit-down rider, stand-up narrow aisle, or electric pallet jack). Additional attendees from the same company who do not receive a training kit are $400 per person.
